German, as the language of the GDR, was not sanctioned as an 'enemy or suspect language' in the Eastern Bloc as English was, but it did give access to the capitalist world, its scientific and technological developments, and, for the lucky few, a language for the place of escape, usually the Federal Republic, Austria or Switzerland. We find, mainly in the lettered world, subjects which can feel free in their vernacular language and primary culture, and who feel that a complete and stable being and desire should not be changed absolutely, as if it were something natural and not cultural.
